A Little History on Barbeque....

From the Caribbean sources, directly or indirectly, the colonists discovered how to barbeque. In the Northern part of Hispaniola the early pioneers were left to their own devices so when shipwrecked sailors, runaway servants and other kinds of vagabond began to take refuge on the island, the food supply presented no problems. From surviving "Caribs" they learned the old island trick of smoke-drying meat on greenwood lattices erected over a fire of animal bones and hides. The Caribs called the technique "Boucan" which passed into French as "Boucanier" and gave the outcasts their name of "Buccaneers". In Spanish the greenwood lattice was called "Barbacoa" which ultimately became "Barbeque". It was the Native Americans and transplanted French in the New World of the Caribbean who began to grill over an open flame, or "Boucans", also known as Barbacoa.

All food can be ordered to go. Indoor and outdoor seating available.
